Spring enrollment highest in school history

The University of Central Florida received good news concerning its enrollment for the second time in less than a month this week when preliminary estimates showed that spring enrollment may top 23,000.

In early January it was announced that UCF's fall enrollment was the highest in history at 23,333. UCF was the only State University System school to reach its fall enrollment goal. Students still may drop courses, but if current estimates hold true it would mark the highest enrollment ever for a spring semester.

"It's a phenomenal spring," said Dan Coleman, director of institutional research.

School officials have not had an opportunity to study the demographics of spring enrollment, however it appears one reason for the high number of students is the university's commitment to undergraduate and graduate education, Coleman said. Another factor may be the partnerships that have developed between UCF and corporations over the past couple of years. School officials also mailed letters inviting current students who failed to register to do so.

The record-setting spring enrollment is the latest sign that the university's popularity is growing. Enrollment at UCF has continued to climb since it was forced to limit classes during the state's economic slump two years ago.

In fall 1992-93, for instance, 21,682 students attended UCF. That year's spring enrollment was 21,590. This year, nearly 2,000 more student enrolled for fall and spring. Fall's enrollment is traditionally larger than spring.

University officials will have a more exact figure for spring enrollment later in the semester.

Hollywood brings television writers' workshop to Florida

Writers pursuing careers in the high-profile television industry will have the chance next month to sharpen their skills and showcase their talents at a workshop featuring Warner Bros. Inc. television executives responsible for such hit shows as "Murphy Brown," "Sisters," "Star Trek: The Next Generation," and "Lois and Clark: The New Adventures of Superman."

The Warner Bros. Writer's Workshop is being co-sponsored by the University of Central Florida and the Orlando Film and Television Office of the Economic Development Commission of Mid-Florida. Sessions will be offered on Feb. 5 and 6, 9 a.m.-6 p.m. at the Enzian Theater, 1300 S. Orlando Ave., Maitland.

"A nationally renowned team of Warner Bros. professionals will share their knowledge on pitching a story idea, shaping an outline, writing a teleplay and evaluating the production impact of a script," said Richard Blum, director of UCF's film program and host and moderator of the workshop sessions.

"Workshop participants will have access to actual scripts and tapes of Warner Bros. television shows and will have the opportunity to have their scripts critiqued by the studio's professionals," he said.

Blum, who persuaded Warner Bros. to offer its workshop in the South for the first time, said the seminar should contribute to Orlando's growing reputation in the television industry as a talent and production center.

"The speed with which Orlando becomes a true alternative to Hollywood will depend on how quickly and completely the creative infrastructure develops," he said.

Blum added that the workshop should help accelerate development, while also giving outside professionals insight into the depth of talent already here.

Warner Bros. executives who will share their insights into the high-energy TV writing craft are:

Program looks to develop future leaders

Undergraduates get jump on civic roles through Leadership UCF; inaugural class next fall

Preparing future community leaders will become a standard feature in undergraduate education at the University of Central Florida next fall when the school launches a credit course probing issues as diverse as guiding Greater Orlando's economic development to allocating limited funding to worthy social agencies.

The three-credit, two-semester course is patterned after the Greater Orlando Chamber of Commerce's Leadership Orlando, which seeks to develop the community leadership potential of rising executives and professionals. The interdisciplinary UCF program, dubbed Leadership UCF, has been designed with the backing of the chamber and combines conventional academic study with experiential learning. UCF juniors or seniors next fall may apply for the 40 openings in the pilot program.

The credit aspect of Leadership UCF and its heavy reliance on immersing students in learning experiences with agencies that deal directly with urban opportunities and problems distinguish the UCF program from others. Relatively few institutions have formal programs for developing the community leadership potential of students.

Just the facts

- What: Leadership UCF
- Where: Campus, community
- When: Begins next fall
- Why: To develop future community leaders
- How it works: Students will study organizations in the community and do class work to develop leadership skills

"In these times of great challenge to urban America, the nation's metropolitan universities should be actively engaged in broadening the base of future community leadership," President John Hitt said. "While we continue to take pride in developing students professionally and intellectually, it is doubly satisfying to know that UCF will play a significant role in making some of our best students more committed to community service and better prepared to translate that commitment into action."

The UCF initiative is especially appropriate, Hitt said, because more than 70 percent of UCF graduates live and work in metropolitan Orlando. In Central Florida, UCF alumni outnumber the graduates of Florida State University and the University of Florida, combined.

Next issue of The UCF Report is Feb. 4 • Deadline is noon, Jan. 26

The students who are selected for the first course will be broadly diverse, explained Belinda McCarthy, dean of the College of Health and Public Affairs, a graduate of Leadership Orlando, and principal architect of Leadership UCF.

Students will be drawn from all of UCF's five colleges.

"We intend to select a class that exhibits appropriate gender balance and has age and ethnic variety," McCarthy said.

Jacob Stuart, president of the Greater Orlando Chamber of Commerce, hailed the program as a collaborative effort that "makes the community a winner." He praised it for following the inclusiveness feature of Leadership Orlando, noting: "In 'Building Community,' John Gardner stresses the critical importance of inclusiveness, realizing that each and every citizen has something to give. In the Leadership Orlando program, we already are practicing Gardner's philosophy, with representation from high school students, neighborhood leaders, places of worship. Currently, three UCF students participate in our fall class, bringing their unique perspectives to the experience."

Selected students will begin their Leadership UCF experience next fall with an orientation and two-day retreat stressing team-building skills. Students then will spend one day a month on and off campus visiting local industries, social service agencies, cultural organizations, government agencies and health care facilities. They also will have assigned readings, will prepare papers and assessment reports, and will maintain journals about their visits.

The course is organized into modules, with hands-on learning opportunities related to government, economic development, the environment, mass communications, education, multiculturalism, health, criminal justice and social services. A closing session will require students to collectively develop a vision for the future of both UCF and the community-at-large.

"As college students complete their final years of education, they typically are directed into increasingly narrow areas of study in class work undertaken with students of similar interests," McCarthy said. "Leadership UCF opens a window on a larger world, providing a capstone learning experience that prepares students to serve their communities and enriches their enjoyment of community resources."

Chris Marlin, UCF student government president, said he welcomed the addition of Leadership UCF to the university's curricula.

"Student Government members envisioned a 'College of Leadership' for UCF in the year 2010 at a planning workshop in May. Just a few months later, the vision is on the road to reality," he said. "This program will certainly position our students to positively impact the mid-Florida community, in substantive ways, for many years to come."

Children, parents learn joy of creating through Very Special Art

The Very Special Arts activities are on their way to Central Florida.

The College of Education plans and coordinates the events while combining resources of community agencies, volunteer groups, school systems and the entire university population to promote an awareness of the educational and cultural benefits of the arts for everyone.

The primary mission of the Very Special Arts outreach program is to meet community needs by providing learning opportunities in the area of the arts for children, ages 3-6, who have special needs.

Some of the scheduled upcoming events are:

- Feb. 5, workshop for teachers and parents at the Orlando Museum of Art, 8:30 a.m.-12:30 p.m. Sessions in music, visual arts, creative movement and drama will be taught by Central Florida teachers. Working with them will be UCF faculty members Lee Cross, Kathy McGhee, Debby Mitchell and Mary Palmer.

- April 26, the Very Special Arts Festival, designed for prekindergarten and kindergarten children, will be in the UCF Arena. Approximately 50 middle school students will be available to participate as mentors to preschoolers who need assistance.

Students will receive a hands-on approach to learning throughout the various activities.

UCF's '93 United Way campaign sets record for donor percentage

The highest percentage of University of Central Florida employees ever donated to the United Way this year, and final reports show that the second largest amount in the history of the university's campaign was collected — less than $2,400 shy of the record.

Slightly more than 38 percent of the university's employees pledged $52,647 to United Way. Barth Engert, co-chair of the campus campaign, said 751 people — 38.08 percent of the university's employees — donated. The amount they pledged is second only to the $55,000 collected four years ago, he said.

Several departments within divisions and colleges had 100 percent participation, he noted.

The accompanying chart is a breakdown of this year's campaign contributors. The 11-individual-department-or-college category is based on the administration listing on pages 6-9 of the University Catalog.
